Liberty University's 2016 Undergraduate Research Symposium

Philosophers in Study (1700) by Johann Michael Bretschneider

The Undergraduate Research Symposium is a forum where Liberty University undergraduate students can share the findings of their research papers and projects and receive valuable feedback from the academic community. The audience will consist of students, faculty, and the general public. Content may be presented as posters—print or digital—or presentations—individual or group.

Professors: If you have any excellent undergraduate students who conducted high-caliber research in your LUO or residential courses this fall, please encourage them to present their findings in our university research symposium.

Students: We welcome your proposals. Instructions for submissions for 2016 will appear shortly. To get an idea though, see the instructions for 2015 at

The 2016 dates will be Tuesday, March 29 through Friday, April 1. Student research is publishable in the Montview: Liberty University Journal of Undergraduate Research. See

<http://digitalcommons.liberty.edu/montview/>

We will have more information, including due dates and links to the application forms the week of December 7.
