CHAPTER FOUR: STRUCTURE

Outline

A. THE ANATOMY OF CULTURE AREAS (114-17)
   1. General Principles (Donald W. Meinig): Illustrated by the Mormon Culture Region
      a. Core Area: Centralized zone of concentration
      b. Domain: Where a particular culture is dominant
      c. Sphere: Zone of outer influence or peripheral acculturation
      d. Zone of Penetration: Illustrated by Texan influences outside the state
         (1) “What is most aberrant about Texas about the Texas culture area is the geography of its core, a bulbous, hollow triangle whose three apices [apices] – the metropolises of Houston, Dallas-Fort Worth, and San Antonio – have interacted complexly and have shared the functions usually confined to a single compact zone.”
   2. Characteristics
      a. Culture areas are slower to respond to agents of change than are economic systems, such as
         (1) the American Manufacturing Belt, which covers parts of three culture areas: New England, the Midland, and the Middle West; and
         (2) Megalopolis, which reaches from southern Maine to northern Virginia

B. THE MAJOR TRADITIONAL CULTURE AREAS (117-33)

   Historical Note: “The contemporary map of American culture areas can be explained in terms of the genesis, development, and expansion of the three principal colonial culture hearths located along the Atlantic seaboard.” Pre-contact aboriginal areas can be ignored, although there is a striking coincidence between the core area of the Iroquois Confederacy in western New York and the “Burned Over District” associated with the Second Great Awakening.

1. New England: the most clearly dominant during the first century of national expansion
   a. Leadership: New England illustrates the capacity of strongly motivated communities to rise above the constraints of a parsimonious environment
   b. Two Subregions: The older southeastern segment and the northern area.
      Boston is the chief hub, but it shares leadership with the lower Connecticut Valley (Hartford and New Haven) and the Narragansett Bay region (Providence and Newport)
   c. Demographic and ideological expansion of New England: zones of penetration included Hawaii, the Caribbean, the Upper Midwest, and the Pacific Northwest

2. The South: the most aberrant of any area with respect to national norms
   a. Different in motives and social values
   b. Diffuseness of its origin and spatial structure
      (1) The rural Chesapeake Bay area in a plausible nuclear hearth
      (2) Southern coastal strip was colonized directly from Great Britain
      (3) Charleston and Savannah were connected with the West Indies
      (4) French Louisiana combines Creole, Acadian (Cajun), West Indian, and African elements
      (5) South Central Texas grew through a German influx
   c. Lack of a focal center has meant convergent or parallel evolution
   d. Chief Subdivisions
      (1) Upper South is derived from the Chesapeake Bay hearth area and the early Midland (Delaware Valley)
      (2) Lower South originated principally in the Chesapeake Bay area
   e. Margins (Outer Limits) of the South
      (1) Northern boundary is isothermal in character (based on length of frost-free season
Its westward extension fades around the 100th Meridian and a critical decline in annual precipitation

f. Subregions
(1) A possible emergent Oklahoma subregion
(2) Texas subregion is large, unmistakable, vigorous, and self-assertive (or as Zelinsky describes Dallas, p. 110, “aggressively narcissistic”)
(3) Peninsular Florida

3. The Midland: “The serious European occupation and development of the Midland Began a generation or more after that of the other major cultural nodes, and after several earlier, relatively ineffectual trials by the Dutch, Swedes, Finns, and British. But, once begun in the late seventeenth century by William Penn, the colonization of the area was an instant success.”
   a. Philadelphia, the major port of entry, became preeminent as the economic, social, and cultural capital; the culture area assumed its distinctive form in Southwestern Pennsylvania, first, as a prosperous agricultural society and, then, as a mixed economy with the addition of mercantile and industrial functions.
      (1) Much of the region acquired an urban character by the middle of the eighteenth century
   b. Polyglot Ethnicity: more an ethnic mosaic than a melting pot
   c. Subregions
       (1) Inner Zone: Pennsylvanian subregion: The Teutonic element is strong and the subregion extends into the Maryland Piedmont, West Virginia, and the Shenandoah Valley
       (2) Outer Zone: New York subregion (New England Extended): a hybrid Place formed mainly from two from two parental strains of almost equal potency
       (3) First intra-American blending and fusion of regional cultures: the Burned-Over District of western New York (north of the Allegheny Plateau) was the seedbed of important religious innovations and a major staging area for western migration
   d. Western Boundary

4. The Middle West: “That large triangular region which is justly regarded as the most modal, the section most nearly representative of the national average.”
   a. Boundaries: The Middle West is bounded roughly by Pittsburgh on the east, Southern Manitoba on the northwest and southern Kansas on the southwest
   b. Convergence: “We can plausibly conjecture that this culture region must be the progeny of all three Colonial regions and that the fertile union took place in the upper Ohio Valley.” Like the South, it lacks a genuine focal zone around which both ideas and commerce were built. [Cincinnati was an important early hub; Chicago became important after the Civil War].
   c. Subregions
       (1) Upper (north of the 41st Parallel): influenced by New England with a rich mixture of German, Scandinavian, Slavic, and other non-WASP elements
       (2) Lower: resembles the South in its predominantly Protestant and British make-up; it also inclines toward nativism

5. The West
   a. The concept of an “American West” is strong in the popular imagination, but the Western livestock complex accounts only for a small fraction of the population
   b. A single, grand Western cultural region does not exist: “The west features eight major (and many lesser) nodes of population, separated from each other by wide expanses of nearly uninhabited mountain or arid desert.”
   c. Areas that reveal a genuine cultural identity
      (1) Upper Rio Grande region: The oldest and strongest sector of Ibero-American activity in the Southwest (Santa Fe); a true traditional region
      (2) Mormon region: Historically derived from New York and New England
      (3) Central California: A product of the Gold Rush (4) Southern California: It arose after 1885 with the advent of the transcontinental railroad and has become “the largest, boldest experiment anywhere in creating a voluntary region.”
