DESCRIPTION

This course is intended to introduce students to the sources and development of American political thought from the colonial period up until the present. First, we examine the classical and Christian influences that shaped the Western intellectual tradition that accompanied the early European settlers who crossed the Atlantic. The distinctly American contributions to this tradition will be given special attention. Second, we study the development of American political thought as a practical response to the demands of nation-building during the 19th and 20th centuries. The course will conclude with student presentations and a discussion of recent trends.

REQUIREMENTS

1. Each student is responsible for assigned readings and should keep a looseleaf notebook for class materials.
2. Participation is an essential part of class. Reading assignments must be completed before the class meets.
3. Attendance is required. One week's absence may be excused for good cause. Each week's absence after the first will result in the loss of one grade point.
4. Students will be tested on their knowledge of reading and discussion material through three essay exams.
5. The remainder of the grade will be determined by three writing assignments:
   -- A 4-6 page report on one of the books listed below (due February 8);
   -- A 4-6 page bibliographic essay on a selected American political thinker based on a careful examination of at least one major work and a brief review of several other works (due March 13); and
   -- A 6-8 page original paper on a topic approved in advance (due April 10). This paper may be consolidated with the bibliographic essay if it is clearly related. Be prepared to present your paper in class during the last two weeks.
