

1-2019

Question 47 - What objections have been raised against the doctrine of inerrancy?

Harold Willmington
Liberty University, hwillmington@liberty.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.liberty.edu/questions\_101

 Part of the Biblical Studies Commons, Christianity Commons, and the Religious Thought, Theology and Philosophy of Religion Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Willmington, Harold, "Question 47 - What objections have been raised against the doctrine of inerrancy?" (2019). 101 Most Asked Questions. 62.
https://digitalcommons.liberty.edu/questions\_101/62

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the 101 Most Asked Questions About the Bible at Scholars Crossing. It has been accepted for inclusion in 101 Most Asked Questions by an authorized administrator of Scholars Crossing. For more information, please contact scholarlycommunications@liberty.edu.

101 MOST ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT THE BIBLE

47. What objections have been raised against the doctrine of inerrancy?

Those opposed to inerrancy have criticized the view as follows:

- A. Inerrancy is not needed, for the Bible is only authoritative in matters of “faith and practice.”

Wayne Grudem writes:

“One of the most frequent objections is raised by those who say that the purpose of Scripture is to teach us in areas that concern ‘faith and practice’ only; that is, in areas that directly relate to our religious faith or to our ethical conduct. This position would allow for the possibility of false statements in Scripture, for example, in other areas such as in minor historical details or scientific facts – these areas, it is said, do not concern the purpose of the Bible, which is to instruct us in what we should believe and how we are to live. Its advocates often prefer to say that the Bible is ‘infallible,’ but they hesitate to use the word inerrant.

“The response to this objection can be stated as follows: the Bible repeatedly affirms that all of Scripture is profitable for us (2 Tim. 3:16) and that all of it is ‘God-breathed.’ Thus it is completely pure (Psa. 12:6), perfect (Psa. 119:96), and true (Prov. 30:5). The Bible itself does not make any restriction on the kinds of subjects to which it speaks truthfully.

“The New Testament contains further affirmations of the reliability of all parts of Scripture: in Acts 24:14, Paul says that he worships God, ‘believing everything laid down by the law or written in the prophets.’ In Lk. 24:25, Jesus says that the disciples are ‘foolish men’ because they are ‘slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken.’ In Romans 15:4, Paul says that ‘whatever was written’ in the Old Testament was ‘written for our instruction.’ These texts give no indication that there is any part of Scripture that is not to be trusted or relied on completely. Similarly, in 1 Cor. 10:11, Paul can refer even to minor historical details in the Old Testament (sitting down to eat and drink, rising up to dance) and can say both that they ‘happened’ (thus implying historical reliability) and ‘were written down for our instruction.’

“If we begin to examine the way in which the New Testament authors trust the smallest historical details of the Old Testament narrative, we see no intention to separate out matters of ‘faith and practice,’ or to say that this is somehow a recognizable category of affirmations, or to imply that statements not in that category need not be trusted or thought to be inerrant. Rather, it seems that the New Testament authors are willing to cite and affirm as true every detail of the Old Testament.”

(Systematic Theology. Zondervan Publishing House. 1994. p. 93)

- B. It is a recent theory, probably originated with the great theologian B. B. Warfield at Princeton in the latter part of the 19th century. In a word, this is false. In reality the doctrine of inerrancy was believed and propagated by the earliest church fathers. Note but one example, the testimony of Augustine (354-430 A.D.):

“It seems to me that the most disastrous consequences must follow upon our believing that anything false is found in the sacred books: that is to say that the men by whom the Scripture has been given to us and committed to writing, did put down in these anything false. If you once admit into such a high sanctuary of authority one false statement, there will not be left a single sentence of those books, which, if appearing to anyone difficult in practice or hard to believe, may not by the same fatal rule be explained away as a statement, in which, intentionally, the author declared what was not true.”

(Nicene & Post. Nicene Fathers. Christian Literature Company. 1886. p. 252)

- C. The term inerrancy is not even found in the Bible. While this is true, neither are the words trinity, Bible, or grandfather to be located in the scriptures! Thus, inerrancy is perhaps a non-scriptural word, but in no sense an un-scriptural one!

- D. The claim that the original manuscripts were inerrant, even if true, is totally irrelevant, for we do not possess any of them today. Again, to quote from Wayne Grudem:

“Those who make this objection point to the fact that inerrancy has always been claimed for the first or original copies of the biblical documents. Yet none of these survive: we have only copies of copies of what Moses or Paul or Peter wrote. What is the use, then, of placing so great importance on a doctrine that applies only to manuscripts that no one has?

“In reply to this objection, it may first be stated that for over 99 percent of the words of the Bible, we know what the original manuscript said. Even for many of the verses where there are textual variants (that is, different words in different ancient copies of the same verse), the correct decision is often quite clear, and there are really very few places where the textual variant is both difficult to evaluate and significant in determining the meaning. In the small percentage of cases where there is significant uncertainty about what the original text said, the general sense of the sentence is usually quite clear from the context. (One does not have to be a Hebrew or Greek scholar to know where these variants are, because all modern English translations indicate them in marginal notes with words such as ‘some ancient manuscripts read . . .’ or ‘other ancient authorities add . . .’)

“This is not to say that the study of textual variants is unimportant, but it is to say that the study of textual variants has not left us in confusion about what the original manuscripts said. It has rather brought us extremely close to the content of those original manuscripts. For most practical purposes, then, the current published scholarly texts of the Hebrew Old Testament and Greek New Testament are the same as the original manuscripts. Thus, when we say that the original manuscripts were inerrant, we are also implying that over 99 percent of the words in our present manuscripts are also inerrant, for they are exact copies of the originals. Furthermore, we know where the uncertain readings are (for where there are no textual variants we have no reason to expect faulty copying of the original). Thus, our present manuscripts are for most purposes the same as the original manuscripts, and the doctrine of inerrancy therefore directly concerns our present manuscripts as well.

“Furthermore, it is extremely important to affirm the inerrancy of the original documents, for the subsequent copies were made by men with no claim or guarantee by God that these copies would be perfect. But the original manuscripts are those to which the claims to be God’s very words apply. Thus, if we have mistakes in the copies (as we do), then these are only the mistakes of men. But if we have mistakes in the original manuscripts, then we are forced to say not only that men made mistakes, but that God himself made a mistake and spoke falsely. This we cannot do.” (Systematic Theology. Zondervan. pp. 96-97)