

The beauty of literature is that it can reveal truths about human nature and the creativity that God has gifted people and that stems from Him. By striving to understand the impact of Orientalism in this poem, it can begin to highlight the faults of humanity and the incorrect views that a society may hold because literature often provides an insight into the thoughts and attitudes of a generation that may not be revealed directly in other scholarly areas. By acknowledging the faults that can be seen through literature, the holiness of God is emphasized because the fact that sinfulness has spread to even something that can be good and honoring to Him is directly visible. Does the way we write about certain topics have sinful roots? Are the characteristics given to characters, the people in the world, and even the differing cultures, honoring God, or does it demonstrate a belief of superiority and pride? These are all important questions about a group of people and from the very literature they write, the answers to these questions can be discovered. Thus, literature research opens the door to understanding the worldview a culture may have and provides a chance to align even the words a person writes to the purpose of glorifying God.
