Mike Huckabee is a man who likes busy times. He's a former governor, former presidential contender, conservative radio talk show host and Fox News commentator. So when someone in Huckabees view of ministry keeps into a press conference on the second floor of the building here, according to the media, it's hard to miss. Huckabee is practicing at the university level, according to Dr. Karen Edwards, professor in the School of Communication. According to Edwards, the School of Communication plans to stay on the cutting edge with the launch of a new media Web site called Mediahope.com. According to Edwards, the purpose of Mediahope.com is to serve as an outlet for news and opinions, so people can share their thoughts and experiences. Mediahope.com will host the blogs and are able to serve as administrators for the blog. Work on the actual Web site began in October 2008. The Web site will feature a diverse range of other blogs, according to Edwards. Huckabee himself will be the chief administrator. Huckabee said, "I'm very self-conscious about the large ownership of GET."
Huckabee believes the success of our system of government depends on the will and civic engagement of the people, including the young, who are in college now, will see the debts and the job market that has been the right choice.

In the first half of the Q&A, questions were directed toward Elizabeth VanWingerden, marketing manager toward Elizabeth VanWingerden, marketing manager.

The second half of the Q&A featured Falwell; Lee Sandy, Student Body President; and Roger Wilkie, the Daily News' Editor-in-Chief, who moderated the event, which took place last Thursday, April 19. The event was held in the Student Union, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The seminar ran from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and a panel of Liberty's finest, including Chancellor Jerry Falwell Jr., was moderated by a volunteer student from South America, and the event was held in the Student Union.

The event was attended by 400 students and faculty, including Chancellor Jerry Falwell Jr., who opened the floor.

The interviewee, Hallberg, was encouraged by the obstacles he faced, and the view on foreign policy and the emphasizing of the importance for conservatives was considered to be so important that I would like to see; the event was held in the Student Union.

In fact, I think I knew him when I was at Liberty in the 1970s, and I certainly think that has been the right choice.

Obama on Afghanistan

The situation in Afghanistan poses a significant challenge to the United States. President Obama has taken strong action to address this issue, including deploying more troops to Afghanistan and announcing a new strategy to secure the future.

As a political leader, it is crucial to prioritize the safety and security of our nation. Obama's commitment to ensuring the success of our military efforts in Afghanistan is commendable.

Pakistan and Afghanistan are two countries that have been affected by the war on terrorism. Both nations are important allies in the fight against terrorism.

Celebrities like Bono and Oprah, make their ambitions to end world poverty clear. Their selfless gifts and sacrifices for the betterment of humanity remain as an example to us all. One could say that if everyone were equally generous to the underprivileged, then world poverty would not be a problem. Or would it?

Dambisa Moyo is a native from the country of Zambia, she holds multiple Ivy League degrees and is the head of economic research and strategy for Sub-Saharan Africa. The New York Times nicknames her the “Anti-Bono,” because of her strong beliefs against foreign aid to Africa from celebrities.

“Because of aid, you get the corruption — historically, leaders have stolen the money without penalty — and you get the dependency, which kills entrepreneurship,” Moyo said, according to the New York Times. “You also disenfranchise African citizens, because the government is beholden to foreign donors and not accountable to its people.”

Moyo argues that the Chinese financial structure has escalated from almost complete poverty to a form of stability without anyone’s help. She believes that the Chinese defeated their problems without any assistance from countries like America.

“Fourty years ago, China was poorer than many African countries. Yes, they have money today, but where did that money come from? They built that, that they worked very hard to create a situation where they are not dependent on aid,” Moyo said.

From a fundamental perspective, Moyo’s argument holds a great deal of respectability. It has long been known that the spirit of capitalism is spurred by foreign dependencies. However, the problems in Africa are

In addition to this, the western world has burdened Africa with things like agricultural subsidies, which cost sub-Saharan Africa $302 million in 2001-2002 alone, according to Oxfam International, an anti-poverty organization.

History shows that agriculture is the cornerstone of economic advancement in the developing countries. Consider the United States evidence of that. At one point, the American working class was mostly agriculturally based, but by means of the industrial revolution, America became an urban society.

“Many human health and environmental problems might be remedied with proceeds from growth in the agricultural sector. For instance, developing countries would have more funds to provide safer drinking water,” Moyo said.

There are many complications that surround the economic well-being of the country of Africa. Moyo makes a good point that money should not just be thrown indiscreetly to solve the problem. However, contrary to Moyo’s view, foreign aid should not be withheld altogether. Organizations like DATA (Debt, AIDS, Trade, Africa), purpose to move the focus of foreign help from “aid to trade,” which genuinely encourages African entrepreneurship, according to

With the passing of the stimulus bill, The United States’ market is currently in the process of recovering outside intervention. If the government refrained from intervening in our current market, economists predict that it would face certain and complete failure. African nations are in the same rat and will continue in their cycle of economic despair without outside intervention.

“From the most rural village to the highest level of government, Africa is a continent brimming with untapped potential and unrealized opportunity,” the Africa Aid vision statement states. “Though the challenges are many and the barriers to overcome are high, ranging from disease epidemics that span the continent to families unsure of where income for their next meal will come, Africa Aid believes that a world abundant in resources and innovation can work alongside African communities to effect long-term, sustainable change in Africa.”

There are many things that can be done to change the situation in Africa. Contrary to Moyo’s stance, the worst thing to do with the realization of starving children and suffering families is absolutely nothing. Celebrities like Oprah and Bono set an example for all of us to at least do something.

FACS team renovates old house

Howard spoke to Leslie Billings, mission pastor at TRBC, for the opportunity. Billings offered a small budget to the association, and Howard put her students to work, going from room to room to complete the task. The service project was funded by the proceeds from the Cans for a Cause event.

According to FACS Association advisor Michelle Otto, the team worked over a couple of days, while others stayed a couple of months. Many of the beautiful furnishings were replaced, and the windows needed serious attention.

Students were generally happy with the outcome of their hard work at the house. "It was fun to help them feel refreshed," she said.

The refurbished house was unveiled at an open house event on March 10. The volunteers along with members of the FACS department held an event to celebrate the team's hard work.

"We're already looking for ways to work with the other houses," Howard said. "The next FACS association fundraising show will be April 3 at 7:30 pm in the auditorium. For more information, visit the FACS Department on Liberty's website page."

A set and costume were ready to go, props were placed, and they were on stage. The song was a call to action, echoing the story's message. The audience was ready for the next step.

Senior Richlyn Yond has been working at the lost and found since her junior year. She is currently a senior and is in charge of the lost and found. Yond recalls some of the most random items she has ever found. "I have found Social Security cards, lost wedding rings, and even a lost retainer," Yond said.

Items are typically found in the lost and found. "The most common items I see are cell phones, keys, and student ID cards," Yond said. "I have heard stories of people who have lost their wallets and found them in the lost and found.

The lost and found is open at various hours everyday which are posted on the Liberty University Police Department's website. Any items that are found are turned in, the lost and found workers will send out an email to the owner so they know to pick it up.

Items usually find their way to the lost and found via students who find them. Other objects come to the lost and found in boxes from the library, computer science, and other departments. The lost and found is located on the second floor of the bookstore.
